

When is it ok to send a 'sick' child to school?

As part of our ongoing commitment to achieve high levels of attendance and to maintaining a healthy school environment, we are sharing some guidance regarding when it is acceptable to send your child to school if they are experiencing mild symptoms of illness.

We understand that the decision to keep your child home can be challenging. Often a child can get to school and perk up when they see their friends and become engaged in learning. If you are unsure, we are happy for you to send them with a note or send an email to let the teacher know to keep an eye on them - they know your child and will let you know if they are not coping at school.

Send your child to school if they have mild symptoms which can be caused by a condition or reaction rather than an infectious illness.

Keep your child at home from school if they are too sick to learn and need time to rest and recover.

Every day matters - it is important our kids get the message that school is important. However, sometimes a child is unwell and requires time to recover and recuperate at home.

If you have any questions about your child's attendance please make contact with your child's homeroom teacher in the first instance or Kate Walters (Community Liaison Attendance)
